FHSU ALUMNUS GLENN TUCKER GIVES BACK TO RURAL BIOLOGY STUDENTS

12/05/22

Growing up in a rural community, 1970 Fort Hays State University alumnus Dr. Glenn Tucker recognized the importance of lending a hand. From the small rural Kansas township of Ogallah, with a current population of 83, Tucker understood the challenges young adults from small communities face when considering their futures. Before passing, Tucker included FHSU in his estate plan to assist future generations of biology students from rural Kansas.

REMINDER FOR FHSU FALL COMMENCEMENT

12/08/22

Fort Hays State University will recognize approximately 1,100 graduates during its third annual fall commencement Friday (in person) and Saturday, Dec. 16-17, for the virtual ceremonies.

ZERO-DEFECT MANUFACTURING UTILIZING AUTONOMATION IN AEROSPACE

12/01/22

Dr. Abeni El-Amin, assistant professor of management and economics, recently co-authored an article with Quinton L. Marks of Honeywell-Aerospace. The article, featured on the Society of Manufacturing Engineers website on December 1, discusses the inherently complex process of zero-defect manufacturing (ZDM) and its application to manufacturing processes. The application of ZDM, the article argues, presents significant challenges and opportunities for the implementation of new processes in manufacturing.

BRENDAN CHAPMAN

I am always inspired by our students' stories. Listening to Brendan Chapman at a recent donor reception did not disappoint. I found his story filled with courage, perseverance, and a humble confidence. Brendan is a Fort Hays senior finishing his double major in history and secondary education. He aspires to complete his master's and doctorate degrees and teach at a university in the future, passing on knowledge to the next generation and publishing his writings along the way.
